Executive summary

The rapid, ubiquitous global proliferation of networked Artificial Intelligence (AI) systems and services gives rise to associated risks. The Critical Security Controls address the general practices that most enterprises should take to secure their systems. The present document guidance emerged from collaborations among experts in the AI sector and intended to apply the security best practices found in the latest version of the Critical Security Controls to AI environments. However, because networked AI systems have the same properties and functions as computational systems generally, a consensus has emerged that the existing Critical Security Controls and implementation tools apply in their present form.
